

Teamwork Reflection

Think about a time when you worked in a team and it did not go well. Explain the situation, what went wrong, and why. What did you learn from the experience? What could you have done differently to improve the teamwork experience and the final outcome?

During my internship with Walk and Roll Long Beach, our team organized a community walk audit to evaluate pedestrian safety and identify areas that could be improved for walking and biking. Staff members prepared observation forms, maps, and educational materials, but when the event started, none of the registered community participants arrived. Because community input is a critical part of a walk audit, we could not complete the activity as originally planned. The experience taught me that teamwork depends not only on the people working the event but also on maintaining communication with participants before the event. If I could do something differently, I would recommend sending reminder emails or text messages, confirming attendance a few days in advance, and creating a backup plan in case participation is lower than expected. These steps would improve communication, help the team adjust quickly, and increase the likelihood of a successful event.

In your opinion, what does it mean to be a member of a team?

In my opinion, being a member of a team means working toward a common goal while supporting and respecting the people around you. Every team member has different responsibilities, but everyone must communicate, stay accountable, and be willing to help when challenges arise. Being a good teammate also means listening to others' ideas, accepting constructive feedback, and completing assigned tasks on time. During my internship, I have learned that successful teams rely on trust, cooperation, and shared responsibility instead of expecting one person to do everything. When each team member contributes their best effort, the entire group is more successful.

What are the advantages of teamwork?

Teamwork provides many advantages because it allows people with different skills and experiences to work together toward a shared objective. When team members communicate effectively, they can solve problems more efficiently and develop stronger ideas than one person could create alone. Teamwork also helps divide responsibilities so that projects are completed more efficiently and deadlines are easier to meet. During my internship, I have seen how collaboration between staff members, interns, volunteers, and community partners helps make outreach events more organized and successful. Working together also creates opportunities to learn from others and improve professional skills.

What are some important qualities when developing a successful team?

Several qualities are essential when developing a successful team. Clear communication helps everyone understand expectations and prevents misunderstandings before they become larger problems. Accountability is equally important because each person must complete their responsibilities on time and with a positive attitude. Respect, flexibility, and reliability also strengthen teamwork by encouraging members to support one another when unexpected challenges occur. Finally, strong leadership helps organize tasks, encourage participation, and keep the team focused on achieving its goals. When these qualities are present, teams are more productive and better prepared to overcome obstacles together.

What positive and negative experiences have you had as a team member recently? Be specific.

One positive experience during my internship has been working alongside staff members during community outreach events, where everyone supported one another by setting up booths, distributing educational materials, and answering questions from community members. Seeing everyone communicate and assist each other created a welcoming environment for participants. A more challenging experience occurred during the community walk audit when no community participants attended despite our preparation. Although the event did not go as planned, it taught me the importance of communication, participant engagement, and having contingency plans. Both experiences have helped me become a more adaptable and dependable team member.

How important is teamwork in your current role and at your current place of employment or internship?

Teamwork is extremely important in my internship with Walk and Roll Long Beach because most projects require collaboration between staff members, interns, volunteers, and community partners. Outreach events, educational programs, and community assessments cannot be completed successfully without everyone contributing to the planning and implementation process. Each team member has a specific role, but everyone depends on effective communication to ensure activities run smoothly. Working in a collaborative environment has helped me develop stronger communication, organization, and problem-solving skills while contributing to public health initiatives that encourage active transportation and healthier communities.

Are there people you depend on to perform your job? Who depends on you to perform their job?

Yes, I depend on my internship supervisor and other Walk and Roll Long Beach staff members to provide guidance, assign projects, answer questions, and coordinate community events. Their direction helps me understand expectations and complete my responsibilities accurately. At the same time, staff members depend on me to complete assigned tasks, assist with outreach activities, prepare materials, collect participant information, and contribute to event preparation. Even though I am an intern, I have learned that every team member plays an important role in helping the organization accomplish its goals and serve the community effectively.
